By International News Service) LONDON, May 23—Prime Minister Winston Churchill resigned today.

The resignation of Churchill was submitted to King George VI as a preliminary move to the reconstruction of his government.

The move by Churchill was a routine step which had been expected ever since the Labor Party indicated its unwillingness to continue its membership in coalition government headed by Churchill at the end of the conflict with Germany.

Churchill resigned after an audience with the King today in Buckingham Palace.

The British monarch was expected to ask Churchill to form a new government.

UP-TO-PRESS-TIME WAR BULLETINS

(By International News Service)

CLAIMS FRENCH TROOPS WERE PROTECTING SYRIA AND LEBANON

San Francisco—Joseph Paul-Bancour, former prime minister of France, today expressed indignation at the charge made in a plea to the big four by Syria and Lebanon that France has used armed troops in these two countries as "instruments of political pressure and coercion."

The Syrian prime minister, Faris Al-Khourri, and the Lebanese minister of the interior, Wadih Naim, yesterday accused France of trying "to establish in Syria and Lebanon a privileged position."

The two Levantine statesmen, who are heads of their respective delegations to the United Nations Conference, charged in a joint statement that the French were using Sengalese troops "for pressure on the Syrian and Lebanese governments" to win culture, economic and strategic advantages.

Paul-Bancour declared that France kept an armed force in Syria and Lebanon to protect those two countries from foreign incursions and to safeguard legitimate French interests. He stressed that "under present uncertain world conditions" France was only performing her duty.

Status of Stettinius

Washington, May 22.—ONE of the minor reasons the final outcome of the San Francisco conference is eagerly awaited here is that not until it is over will it be possible to know anything about the future of Secretary of State Stettinius, whose future at the moment is more than a little cloudy. Interest in this has been heightened by news that Mr. Stettinius is returning to Washington this week for brief conferences with the President and others.

—O—

THE FACT is the status of Mr. Stettinius is quite the most interesting, as regards an individual, of any in Washington. It also seems to be rather unique in our history. Certainly, the position in which circumstances have placed him is anything but a happy one and has been anything but helpful to him in his leadership of the San Francisco conference. It could not fail to handicap him there. Anyone who looks at the facts will agree. Considering them, in the opinion of unbiased observers, he has done remarkably well.

—O—

Originally appointed by Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Stettinius has been Secretary of State less than six months. His selection was generally credited to Mr. Harry Hopkins, who had been his chief patron and friend. Up to the time Mr. Roosevelt died, Mr. Stettinius had a very good press and was going along very well. But soon after Mr. Truman came in things began to break badly for him. It was not that the new President evinced toward him anything save personal friendliness and support. His troubles came largely from two other sources—one, Democratic party leaders; the other, a group of writers and radio commentators who specialize in State Department affairs and who were mostly hostile to Mr. Cordell Hull when he was the Secretary.

—O—

MR. HULL was such an outstanding figure and so strong in the country that while his journalistic criticisms were irritating they were also futile. Of course, Mr. Stettinius is not Mr. Hull. He not only makes

HISTORY

A booklet just off the presses will give school children of Bucks County a chance to try an experiment in education often discussed but rarely undertaken—that of enjoying specialized study about the history of their own community.

The booklet is Unit One of a series to be entitled "This is Bucks County."

Fittingly enough, Unit One deals with the original inhabitants of this part of Pennsylvania—the Lenni Lenape Indians whom the first white settlers found living along the Delaware River.

Published by the Bucks County Teachers Association and the Bucks County School Directors Association, under the editorship of Charles H. Boehm, superintendent of Bucks County Public Schools, the book is to be made available this Fall to grade school classrooms throughout the county.

Unit One sets a high standard, both in content and presentation, for the expected successors, which are to cover such fields as transportation, early forms of manufacture, early Americans who settled here, and similar special fields in local history.

The booklet is profusely illustrated with drawings from various sources, most of them embodying years of scientific research into the tribes. These pictures cover every phase of the Indian life—their agriculture, manufacture and daily life, as well as their religious ceremonies and their legends.

More detailed accounts of Lenni Lenape culture are contained in the text, which is presented in form easily understandable to grade children.

There could be no finer introduction to the study of American and world history, so far as Bucks county youngsters are concerned, than learning about human events which have taken place along the streams and highways, and among the hills and forests, with which they are daily familiar.

Cradled in Bucks county was a new concept of the relationship between citizen and government—a theory which was at first almost revolutionary and since has become commonplace.

During the days when William Penn and such of his associates as Phineas Pemberton were living on the banks of the Delaware between Bristol and Morrisville, Bucks county was leading the whole world in the march toward freedom and equality.

Since those days countless major events elsewhere had their bright reflections within this county, and more than once the final decisions focussed on Bucks county residents or places.

This county has witnessed the whole pageant of evolving civilization. It has seen transportation grow from bridlepaths and foot trails to broad modern highways; from horse or ox drawn conveyances, through stage coaches and canal boats, to steam trains; and, more recently, the rise and decline of trolleys, the coming of the automobile and airplane.

Each of these forms of transportation has left its visible mark; and what more stimulating approach to understanding these epochs of the past than to visit the old inns at Doylestown, created for stagecoach days; or the canal running upstream from Bristol; or the newly-reconstructed manorhouse at Pennsbury, which reproduces as closely as is possible its exact appearance when William Penn lived there.

AGAIN APPEAL TO WOMEN TO AID IN SORTING CLOTHING

What is to be done with the large quantity of clothing which was collected in the Bristol area for the refugees of Europe?

That is the question which is bothering the committee which had the collection of the clothing in charge.

The clothing is piled high in the display room of Percy G. Ford's garage on Farragut avenue. Only a small portion of it has been sorted and made ready for shipment. An appeal was made last week in which the women of the Bristol area were asked to aid in sorting this clothing and prepare it for packing. The response was very mail. Only a few women and some high school girls responded.

The clothing is still there in heaps and piles, but it is not serving the purpose for which it was intended and the refugees in wartime Europe are in the meantime going practically naked.

In an appeal today to Burgess Jacob C. Schmidt, the committee asked that the Burgess appeal to the women not only of Bristol but of the entire Bristol area, to go to Mr. Ford's garage and aid in the sorting and packing of this clothing.

Now the women of Bristol have never failed in any war activity and it is believed that they will respond nobly on this occasion and do this work, so that the clothing can be shipped to the points where it is needed and needed badly. Women and little children as well as the man of many sections of Europe are going about scantily clad. They must be clothed and America has never yet failed to give aid and assistance where it was needed.

The appeal of Burgess Schmidt does not ask for money, it merely asks for a few hours of work each day until the clothing is sorted. The larger the number of women responding the quicker the work can be done and the lesser hardship it will be on any individual.

The appeal is directed to church groups, lodges and individuals. Won't you please help?

CRUCIAL YEAR FOR AUTOS

All indications are that the next twelve months will be the most crucial of the war for automobile transportation in the United States. Motorists who can hardly wait to buy a new car should assimilate these facts:

The announcement of the Petroleum Administration for War that it expects shortly to authorize a substantial increase in gasoline rations for holders of A cards.

The increased output of tires for civilian motorists.

The War Production Board's estimate, "on the basis of available information," that 200,000 passenger cars will be produced late this year and that production can be stepped up to 400,000 cars in the first three months of 1946.

The expected increase in gasoline rations is expected to be one gallon a week, which would permit every car owner to drive approximately two more miles daily, but the allotment of new tires is only for C and B ration holders. It will be a long time before new cars are available for anyone except drivers with high priorities.

That is to say, the nation's A ration drivers, who are alleged to number 68 per cent of all motorists, can get a trifle more use out of their cars shortly but have no prospects of tire or car replacements. How they use their cars is therefore important. How C and B drivers use their cars is also important, because even in their cases there will be by no means enough replacements to go around.

In line with this situation is the urgent appeal of John L. Collyer, special director of the WPB rubber programs, for strict observance of the 35-mile-an-hour speed limit in the warm months ahead in order to save tire wear.

Collyer said that production of new tires will continue to run behind demand and that it will be impossible to meet military and essential civilian transportation needs for many months. He pointed out that tire wear is 50 per cent greater at 50 miles an hour than at 35. He asked governors of all states to urge civilians to re dedicate themselves to the 35-mile limit.

In view of the need for keeping all available cars on the road to prevent transportation breakdowns, it is a re dedication all motorists ought to be willing and eager to make.

FARM LAND PRICES

The American Bankers Association is the latest organization to take up a banner against inflationary prices for farm lands. It has sent a warning to banks in rural areas to follow conservative lending policies in an effort to check a land boom which is getting under way in many parts of the country. Land prices are up 52 per cent above prewar level as a national average. What is especially alarming is the fact that purchases in many instances are for speculative purposes. In the land boom following World War I, investors were confined almost entirely to farmers. When prices of crops dropped, many farmers were in trouble.

a much more vulnerable target but is much more easily disturbed by what his friends regard as the extreme unfairness of the attack. This has taken the form of assertions that he lacks skill, judgment and experience as a diplomat, that he does not measure up to the job. On these grounds a journalistic demand was made before the San Francisco conference that he be replaced by a more mature and equipped man, Mr. Truman, naturally, paid no attention to this demand and has done nothing calculated to weaken or disturb his Secretary of State while the conference is on—quite the contrary. However, this has not prevented repeated publication of the report that his successor—Mr. James F. Byrnes—already has been chosen.

—O—

CIRCULATION of these reports and charges in the press and over the air have naturally not contributed to Mr. Stettinius's serenity as a leader. However, they have aroused considerable sympathy for him and there has been some reaction not alone against the cruelty of his critics but at the degree to which they have enfeebled the American position by their assault. So far as the feeling of the party leaders toward Mr. Stettinius is concerned, that is wholly due to the fact that should anything happen to Mr. Truman, Mr. Stettinius would become President. It isn't a probability, but it is a distinct possibility. Being wholly without any party status, strength or experience, this is not a thing they seem able to contemplate calmly.

—O—

APPARENTLY in addition to being a close friend of the President's, Mr. Byrnes is favored by both groups of Stettinius critics. It is true that he has had no more diplomatic background than Mr. Stettinius, and that one trip to Yalta does not make a man an international authority. But his party status and experience are overwhelmingly superior. Furthermore, he is astute, shrewd, popular and personable. Most observers here regard him as slated for the post, though no one pretends to first-hand knowledge from either the President or Mr. Byrnes. One obstacle to the Byrnes appointment is being widely discussed. What can be done with Mr. Stettinius, particularly what can be done with him if the result of San Francisco is agreement upon a collective security charter that will be generally satisfactory and acclaimed as a big stride toward the goal of permanent peace through international co-operation?

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

Mrs. Doody was a tiny, new, a minister's widow, and an old friend of Daphne. There were many things to speak of before Kate Dennison asked if Miss Webster, the school teacher, was still living with her.

Daphne was quick to see that her opportunity had come when Mrs. Doody said that Miss Webster had resigned after "a sick spell" and gone to live with her sister.

"She never caused me a moment's trouble," Mrs. Doody declared, "until she got sick, and then it was wait on her day and night."

Daphne remarked eagerly, "That must have been during the time you had the doctor staying with you."

"No, dearie, he wasn't here then. Dr. Fenwick didn't come until . . . let me see . . . a year ago last July when the Institute opened."

"My, how time flies!" Kate observed, with quick knowing glance at Daphne. "It seems like yesterday that Dr. Fenwick came. How long was he here until he moved over to the Institute?"

"He didn't move there. Oh no!" "No?" queried Kate, helping herself to a piece of cake from the tray. "I should think he'd hate to leave you. You're such a wonderful cook."

"He didn't want to leave. That reminds me, Kate, I'll give you my recipe . . ."

Daphne cut in hastily, "He was called away to a better post?"

Mrs. Doody put her cup down and leaned forward with an expression that said plainly she was about to impart something important. "He wanted to go all right, my dear, but he didn't go because he was tied away."

Her guests assumed you don't say so expressions.

"Poor Dr. Fenwick! I don't suppose I ought to tell you, but . . ."

Kate lowered her voice to Mrs. Doody's conspiratorial tone. "You know it won't go any further."

"I know it won't, Kate. Well, Dr. Fenwick left real mad. My poor, dear husband wouldn't like to hear me say that, but he always said there was such a thing as righteous anger. I'm sure that was the way it was with Dr. Fenwick. The way that man worked, my dear . . . at the laboratory from early morning until late at night . . ."

"What was he doing there?" asked Daphne.

"I don't know exactly. Some kind of an experiment, to find some thing."

Both ladies, completely in the dark, nodded knowingly.

"Well, that last night Dr. Fenwick was here, Dr. Lindquist came to the door about nine o'clock, demanding to see him. I didn't mean to listen, I don't hold with that."

IF THIS, as seems likely, transpires, it cannot help but redound to the credit of Mr. Stettinius. As chairman of the American delegation, as one of the chairmen of the conference and as Secretary of State, his was emphatically a position of leadership. If the conference should fail, the blame certainly would be placed squarely upon him—especially by his critics. If it succeeds, a large share of the credit has got to be given him. This, it would seem, will make it difficult to replace him. You cannot very well demote nor humiliate a Secretary of State who has made good on such an assignment. And there seems no way to promote a Secretary of State. Making him Ambassador to Great Britain or any other country would be a demotion. Putting him on the Security Council of the new league would be the same thing. Also, it would meet with the same kind of criticism to which he is now subjected. How President Truman will solve this problem remains to be seen. If it involves humiliation for Mr. Stettinius, after a San Francisco success, perhaps he may take no action at all. Nevertheless, Mr. Byrnes continues to be regarded as sure to succeed him soon.

Call Made For Type "O" Blood Donors

Philadelphia is to be included in the group of 11 blood donor centers which will collect the whole blood to aid the boys requiring such at certain periods in the future. Teams will come to Bristol from Philadelphia in the near future to screen individuals who are willing to participate, thus determining which ones have type "O" blood.

Sometime after lists of the type "O" individuals are compiled, they will be asked to go to Philadelphia to make their donation. "Furthermore they will be notified that this is to be kept entirely secret, they being requested to tell no one when they are called. This pledge to secrecy is decided upon so that there will be given to the enemy no information as to the number of pints of whole blood being taken for shipment to the Pacific or when it is sent.

The teams will arrive in Bristol soon for the purpose of screening would-be donors. Thus they can determine how many of the type "O" donors there will be. Those persons who have already been screened, and know they have type "O" or type "A," and who are willing to participate in this secret action, will be asked to telephone Mrs. Theodore B. Megaree, Bristol 2920. Sometime in the future they will be summoned to Philadelphia to donate.

Red Cross officials state: "Bristolians can be justifiably proud that they are to be included in the whole blood project. In the very near future, type "O" blood from these donors will be flown overseas for whole blood transfusions. Other types of blood will, of course, continue to be taken and processed into plasma, which is as necessary as ever on the front lines, and is particularly needed for those suffering from shock and burns."

With the cessation of hostilities in Europe, 19 Blood Donor Centers in other sections of the country are closing, having successfully completed their requirements. Five centers on the eastern seaboard, five on the West Coast, and Chicago in the middle west, will continue to produce blood for plasma and for whole blood transfusions.

Type "O" whole blood procured in the 11 centers will be flown daily to Guam by the Naval Air Transport Service where it will be distributed to army, navy and marine installations throughout the Pacific. In Philadelphia, it will be taken to New York. Blood of other donors, including that procured by the 18 mobile units operated by the centers, will be processed into plasma.

"The lives saved by whole blood and plasma on Iwo Jima and Okinawa alone fully indicate the urgent need for blood donations," officials state. "We must keep a constant supply of whole blood and plasma available for every man who needs it."

"Every day from San Francisco, 1,000 pints of whole blood go to the Pacific. This type, entirely different from plasma, is needed by the very badly wounded men. A hospital corpsman out on the field replied when asked what is the one greatest needed facility: 'More outfits with whole blood and plasma.'"

Those present: James and William Pendergast, Barbara Joan Buck, "Judy" Martin, Samuel Fenton, Gordon Goff, Janet Wolvin, Ronald and Patricia Denight, Bristol; George McKenzie and Katherine Mann, Philadelphia.

There has been a great deal of dissatisfaction, expressed in many ways, over the way in which history is being taught in public schools—or at least, over the fact that too few Americans are growing up really interested in their own land's origin and development.

Many legislatures, including Pennsylvania's, have made certain history courses compulsory. Surveys without number have been taken to show either the lack of knowledge or lack of interest by young people, up to and including university students.

It may be that the experiment now being undertaken in this county offers a solution through the idea of interesting the child first in what he can see around his own home, and then broadening his contacts with history step by step until he can trace a personal chain of interest to Julius Caesar, Napoleon Bonaparte—and the founding fathers of his own country.

Perhaps history, as is said of charity, ought to begin at home.

on Daily Foods to Fill B Vitamin Need people who do not know of nutritional science are likely to be upset by some of the remarks they hear... such as "B vitamins in food are lost" before we ever eat the food. These remarks imply that we do not rely on foods to give us the vitamins we need. They suggest that a good diet needs to be supplemented with some additional source of these vitamins.

Recent years, the National Stock and Meat Board has had numerous studies to determine the amounts of the B vitamins contained in meat, both before and after cooking. We can say, on the basis of scientific study, that meats are excellent sources of the B vitamins, even after they are cooked by the usual methods of cooking.

Thiamine (vitamin B1) as an example. It has been found that a one-ounce serving of meat, after cooking, provides about one-fourth of the total amount of this vitamin recommended daily for a moderately active man. This is true because a large percentage of the thiamine in the meat is retained during cooking.

Almost all of the riboflavin and niacin (two other B vitamins) remains in the meat and drippings during cooking. A serving of meat supplies about one-tenth of the day's need of riboflavin; but variety meats such as liver, kidney and heart furnish a great deal more than that. A serving of meat supplies over one-third of the day's need of niacin.

Whenever we cook meat by moist heat methods (braising or stewing), we can conserve the B vitamins by using the meat drippings for gravy, as some of these vitamins go into the drippings during cooking. Also, with meats such as pork, which should always be cooked well done, care should be taken not to over-cook the meat.

Including ample amounts of meat in our meals will help greatly to insure our getting all the B vitamins we need. With additional amounts supplied by milk products, certain vegetables, and enriched or whole grain cereals and bread—any normal persons should be able to get the full amount of B vitamins needed, from a varied and well-balanced diet.

And there is real wisdom in getting one's vitamins from food. We must remember that even the scientists do not know all there is to know about vitamins! There are some vitamins we know very little about, and doubtless others which have not even been discovered. When we rely on our foods to give us the vitamins we need—we undoubtedly get others, in addition, which we do not know we need.

Left-Over Meat Has Many Possibilities

Nowadays, a wise homemaker doesn't hesitate to make a meal out of leftovers, says Jessie Alice Cline, home economist. Of course, she doesn't let on that they're leftovers; she's discovered that with a little ingenuity, a slight twist here or there, a new dish is created!

For instance, consider the many fascinating dishes which a resourceful cook can prepare from left-over pot-roast.

First, she might slice the meat, and change the flavor of the gravy by adding spices, tomato or mushroom soup, or chili sauce. Then she might (1) put the meat slices and gravy in a casserole, and dry bread crumbs, and brown in the oven; or (2) make a savory bread dressing, lay the sliced meat on top, and pour gravy over it.

Secondly, she might cut the meat in cubes. Then she could choose any one of these alternatives: (1) combine the meat with cooked vegetables and gravy, put in baking dish, and top with biscuit or pastry crust; (2) line a casserole with cooked rice or mashed potatoes, fill the center with meat and gravy, and heat in the oven; (3) make fresh hot biscuits (large ones) and serve the meat in these as a short-cake, with gravy over the top; (4) make a meat and vegetable stew and add dumplings; (5) add the diced meat to a cream sauce, and serve on crisp waffles or in individual pastry shells.

In the third place, she might chop or grind the cooked meat. She can then use it in one or more of the following ways: (1) combine meat with a thick white sauce and seasonings, and make meat croquettes; (2) combine meat with chopped cooked potatoes for tasty hash; (3) fold the meat, seasoned, into an omelet; (4) season and moisten the meat, spread on biscuit dough, roll up and slice into pin-wheels, which are baked in a hot oven; (5) mix the meat with relishes, seasonings, or mayonnaise to make a hearty filling for lunch box sandwiches.

With all these ideas, it's no wonder that the clever homemaker is overjoyed to find leftover meat in the refrigerator!

What keeps your ELECTRIC CLOCK on time?

THAT electric clock of yours seems effortless as it silently marks the passing seconds.

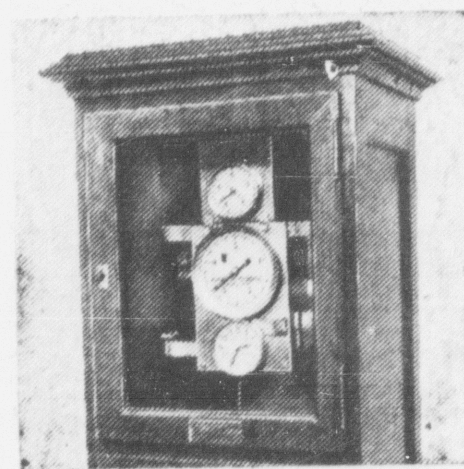

But behind it are skillful control mechanisms that required years to perfect.

One of them has to do with the speed of the generators which produce the electricity.

Another, suggested by P.E. engineers and made right here in Philadelphia, charts the speed so that the effect of sudden fluctuations in demand may be observed and compensated for. This assures the accuracy of your clock.

These ingenious devices make it possible to keep electric clocks "on the beam" with official time. The accuracy with which P.E. carries out this work is indicated by the fact that all electric clocks in a large eastern section of the nation are controlled* from our office at 1000 Chestnut Street.

Constant research and experimenting of this sort help P.E. keep electricity both dependable and economical, and contribute to the achievements of industry and to the convenience of your home.

*This master clock, one of the devices mentioned above, is the heart of this control.

seven, adults and children filed in to remain until 11 and enjoy a lengthy and interesting presentation.

Members of the Cadet Drum and Bugle Corps of Robert W. Bracken Post marched from the post home to the theatre, and after giving a concert in front of the theatre went inside to continue their numbers as their colors were massed on the stage. Edward Lynn, manager of the Grand, served as master of ceremonies.

The stage acts were from a well-known Philadelphia radio program, and included solo dances, and vocal and instrumental numbers. The participants were rewarded with rounds of applause.

Prior to the stage and screen shows Barnard's orchestra delighted with many selections. Amplification was arranged by Prof's Store.

Mr. Lynn, in addressing the gathering and expressing appreciation for fine response to bond sales, paid tribute to Mrs. John Leslie Killycane, who has charge of the drive in this area.

Great Damage Caused By Storm Throughout Area

Elsewhere throughout Bristol, limbs were torn off trees, awnings were blown to pieces and plants were cut by the hail.

The heaviest damage was done in the Cornwells Heights and Andalusia sections. At the residences of Frank Peak and James Bowers, Bristol Pike, large trees were blown down across the Bristol Pike and traffic was blocked.

When a poplar tree fell at the Bowers residence it carried the entire front porch and a corner of the house with it. The porch was tipped loose from the house and laid flat on the ground and the upper corner and a portion of the side of the house was torn out.

Emergency police and firemen were called and the former guided traffic and detoured it around the blocked highway while the firemen stretched tarpaulins over the damaged portions of the Bowers residence, so as to keep the rain from damaging the interior and the contents.

Crews of the Philadelphia Electric Company and the Bell Telephone Company went into quick action. There were nearly 50 telephones reported out in the Cornwells Heights section, while elsewhere...

Churchill's Resignation Submitted To King George

new administration, thus preparing the way for immediate break-up of the present coalition government which has been in power throughout the war in Europe.

The dissolution of Parliament will follow and a call for a general election will be issued. The election reportedly has been scheduled for July 5th.

Churchill immediately will begin formation of a new "caretaker government" which will hold office in the interim period up until the time of the general election.

Churchill resigned his other government posts along with the premiership.

"Mr. Churchill," the Downing Street announcement said, "in an audience with the King at noon, tendered his resignation as Premier, First Lord of the Treasury and Minister of Defense."

Churchill's decision to resign was prompted by the flat refusal of the Labor Party, second most important group in the coalition to the Prime Minister's own Conservative Party, to stay on until the conflict in the Far East was concluded.

Variety of Ways For Serving Veal

With increased production of veal and scarcity of some other meats, many American families are eating more veal. Veal has a fine, delicate flavor, and when cooked slowly to the well-done stage, it is tender and juicy, says Jessie Alice Cline, home economist. Veal combines well with other foods.

For homemakers who are interested in learning new ways to serve veal, here are a few suggestions. Don't forget that the no-point, low-point cuts make delicious veal stew, pot pie, fricassee or ground veal dishes.

Savory Veal Steaks with Gravy
1½ pounds veal shoulder steaks
2 tablespoons flour
1½ teaspoons salt
1½ teaspoons dry mustard
2 tablespoons lard or drippings
onions, sliced
1 cup water
1 small can evaporated milk or 1 cup top milk

Mix dry ingredients and pound into meat. Brown steaks on one side in hot fat. Sprinkle with any remaining flour mixture, turn and brown on other side. Cover with onions. When second side is brown, add water, cover and simmer 1½ hours or until tender. Remove meat to platter. Add milk to drippings, heat thoroughly and serve as sauce with meat. Serves 6.

Pressed Veal
4 pounds veal shank, meat and knucklebone
½ cup diced carrots
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ cup chopped celery
3 hard-cooked eggs
Salt and pepper
Cover meat and bone with water. Add chopped vegetables; simmer until meat is tender. Drain, reserving broth. Let broth simmer until reduced to 1 cup, then strain, cool and skim. Dice or grind meat and add to broth. Season with salt and pepper. Decorate mold with slices of hard-cooked eggs; pack in veal mixture and chill.

Veal and Bacon Salad
3 cups diced cooked veal
½ cup crisp bacon, cut fine
½ cup diced celery
¼ cup radish slices
½ cup mayonnaise
6 small tomatoes
Mix veal and bacon with celery, radishes and mayonnaise. Chill. Place each tomato in a lettuce cup. Cut down in several sections to open. Place a mound of the salad mixture on the tomato; top with mayonnaise.

ARE YOU A BEAR THREE DAYS A MONTH?

Why let "monthly grumps" make you miserable—and everyone about you? Maybe they are not necessary. Thousands of girls and women here discovered that functional periodic pains usually are greatly relieved when they take Chi-Ches-Ters Pills at the time their period is expected. Taken according to directions, preferably two or three days before your time, they tend to relax the muscular contractions that have been found to cause pain, cramps, headaches and nervousness at such periods. An added iron ingredient in Chi-Ches-Ters Pills helps to promote resistance and energy. Be sure to ask your druggist for Chi-Ches-Ters Pills, and accept no substitute. Caution: Use only as directed.

ONE MORE SUCH VICTORY

and the War is done!

V-E DAY was as genuine as the lives of American manhood that were sacrificed to win it. The rejoicing was spontaneous and sincere. But through it all—through the laughter and the tears and the prayers—America was solemnly realistic.

Not a one of us forgot that another and far different war was yet to be won.

It may be hard to believe that V-E Day, marking the end of the war against Germany, marked, as well, the start of more concerted war against Japan.

It may be hard to believe that we are still as far from normal living as many of our sons and brothers and relatives and friends are far from home.

BUT BOTH ARE TRUE . . . and if you are on the waiting lists for home or business telephones, you'll find that V-E Day made little difference except, perhaps, in point of time.

The producers of peace-time telephone equipment—instruments, switchboards, cable, and the like—must continue to produce for war . . . and that means waiting and waiting lists.

There's no other answer . . . nor would you want a better one.

Meanwhile—need we say it?—we don't like to keep anyone waiting for telephone service.

BRISTOL HIGH WINS OVER MORRISVILLE; FINAL SCORE, 5 TO 2

Joe Centonze Gets Double and Three Singles in Four Trips to Plate

BRISTOL WINS HONORS

Scores 8th Straight League Victory and Also Lower Bucks Championship

MORRISVILLE, May 23—With Joe Centonze getting a double and three singles in four trips to the plate, Bristol High scored a 5-2 victory over the Morrisville Bulldogs yesterday afternoon for its eighth straight Lower Bucks County League triumph and also the Lower Bucks championship.

Early this week, it was learned that Langhorne had forfeited the game played at Langhorne which resulted in a Redskin victory. Bristol protested the game because Langhorne used two players who had played semi-pro ball. After an investigation, Langhorne officials decided to forfeit to Bristol.

"Toby" Oriola did the hurling for the Bunnies and allowed the Morrisville eight hits. He blanked them for six innings but had a wild streak in the seventh when he passed two batters and Morris and Lebergern got singles for a pair of runs.

Bristol had thirteen hits off "Johnny" Lebergern, four of these coming in the final inning and along with a pass netted three runs and the Bristol certainty of victory.

The clean sweep of baseball games gave Coach Harold Stackhouse his fourth Lower Bucks County championship since coming to Bristol. His football eleven won the crown. The basketball team also won as did his track team which scored 100% points in the LBC meet. Now his baseball team was undefeated.

VOLTZ NINE EAGER TO GET A FIRMER GRIP ON 2ND PLACE

Will Attempt to Defeat the Eastern Aircraft Team Here Tonight

ON HIGH SCHOOL FIELD

Only Half a Game Separates The Two Teams in League Standing

The Voltz-Texaco team will attempt to secure a firmer grip on second place in the Trenton Industrial League this evening when it meets the Eastern Aircraft nine on the high school field, starting at 6:15 o'clock.

The Voltz-men are one-half game ahead of the aircrafters in the league standing and must have tonight's victory to hold on to the lead. In the event of an Eastern Aircraft triumph, the gasmen will drop to third place.

It is most likely that either "Parrot" Dick or "Eddie" Sullivan may draw the pitching assignment with Jack Broderick behind the plate. Manager George Dougherty is not contemplating any changes in the infield or outfield.

Dick has hurled two games since coming home on a furlough from the South Pacific where he is a lieutenant in General MacArthur's headquarters. His leave time is drawing short and there is a possibility that Manager Dougherty will use him as much as possible.
